CAPITA TRAVEL AND EVENTS AND MAIDEN VOYAGE JOIN FORCES TO HELP MAKE HOTEL WORLD MORE FEMALE FRIENDLY

Capita Travel and Events, the UK's specialist in travel, meetings and event management and Maiden Voyage the world's leading provider of female business traveller safety solutions have joined forces in a unique deal to certify and showcase hotels that are 'Female Friendly'.

Maiden Voyage sets the standard for female friendly, hotels based on a strict set of criteria looking at both safety and comfort. With employers becoming increasingly aware of their duty of care obligations, an informed choice takes away some of the guess-work when selecting hotels and of course, hotels deemed female friendly are also just as suited to male travellers. Capita Travel and Events will be inspecting hotels across the British Isles and incorporating those that qualify into their hotel programme.

Leigh Cowlshaw, director of supplier partnerships, Capita Travel and Events, said "We asked travellers whether or not they ever feel at risk when travelling and 67% of women said yes, compared with 19% of men. Our data also tells us that female travellers form a large proportion of our customers' travelling population – a trend which varies between customer industries. Traveller wellbeing, for all travellers, is an important part of our Smarter Working proposition, so it made sense for us to join forces with a company which is changing the way in which hoteliers approach the needs of individuals. At the same time, Maiden Voyage saw the opportunity to use our UK hotel market expertise to help source the types of properties which meet its identified criteria – Maiden Voyage research shows that women business travellers want to be treated appropriately, not necessarily differently."

Carolyn Pearson, chief executive officer and founder of Maiden Voyage said "We are delighted to be working with hotel experts, Capita Travel and Events, on this initiative and we know that the female business traveller community will thank us for helping them to identify hotels that meet their specific needs. With 51% of female business travellers having reported feeling vulnerable when staying in a hotel we know that there is a genuine need for a trusted standard. Our strict inspection process is based on hard criteria unlike other initiatives we have seen and is far from subjective. We look at physical security elements, walk the area to assess the hotel location and we expect our hotel partners to adhere to certain security measures such as not announcing room numbers out loud. With a number of high profile cases of sexual harassment and assaults in hotels we expect this partnership to drive change across the industry and we are already seeing hotels such as the Leopold in Sheffield and Hotel du Vin in Birmingham making adjustments such as adding a second door lock to the hotel bedrooms”.
